New Objectified Labour from the CAVE!

The Cultures, Academic Values and Education Research Centre are pleased to announce the publication by Palgrave Macmillan of the text entitled ‘Higher Education in Ireland: Practices, Policies and Possibilities’ edited by Andrew Loxley, Aidan Seery and John Walsh with contributions by colleagues from across the Irish higher education landscape.

The main aim of the book is provide a valuable case study of a small European system in an era of exceptional policy demands, economic uncertainty and societal change. This collection provides the first in-depth, interdisciplinary and overarching review of the current state of Irish higher education. The analysis is framed by the history of the Irish system, the development of European and national policies and the unique intersection of social and cultural forces at work in Ireland today. The authors are drawn from a wide range of disciplines and institutions, providing a comprehensive overview and diversity of perspectives.