The School of Education’s Visiting Research Fellow Dr. Esther Murphy recently received funding from the New Forum of Teaching and Learning to host a seminar to launch EU digital inclusion initiative, DigiPlace4all.

DigiPlace4all is an online peer support community, sustained by Digital Inclusion Champions, helping people with disabilities and specific learning difficulties build the digital literacy skills needed for mainstream education and employment.

This event aims to bring our community members together to share their perspectives using the site, introduce our digital champions, run demonstrations of the site and engage with new community members. It will be attended by students, educators, employers, NGOs, disability supporters, digital skills trainers and others.
