NEW MIGRATIONS, NEW CHALLENGES

NEW MIGRATIONS, NEW CHALLENGES

In the 21st century new population movements and migration flows are reshaping European societies, particularly in countries transformed from emigration to in-migration, including, since 2004, the EU's new member states.

This conference – organised by the Trinity Immigration Initiative, an interdisciplinary research programme located in one of Europe's new migration destinations – aims to debate the global and national implications of these new migration flows for sending and receiving countries and for migrants themselves. What are the implications of these migrations for Europe? What do these migrations mean for new immigrant societies? What lessons can be learnt from countries with longer immigration experience?

Plenary Speaker: Professor Loic Wacquant, Research Associate at the Institute for Legal Research, Boalt Law School, University of California at Berkeley. Prof Wacquant is also a researcher at the Centre de sociologie européenne in Paris.

Plenary Speaker: Dr Adrian Favell, Associate Professor of Sociology, University of California, Los Angeles.

PAPERS ARE INVITED AROUND THE FOLLOWING THEMES:

- Methodological issues in large scale migration research
- Policy implications for state institutions with particular reference to criminal justice system and housing policies
- The education system's response to the linguistic challenges of immigration
- Migrants' labour market experiences, careers and aspirations
- Children, youth and immigration
- Migrant-led networks and their role in migrant integration

CHILDREN, YOUTH AND IMMIGRATION

What does migration mean for children and young people? Despite their being a major part of the migrant population and experience, children and youth as immigrants, 'hosts', trans-located migrants, or as young people 'left behind' receive comparatively little attention in the research on migration. Papers are invited which address issues such as the experience of immigrant young people in their adjustments to the institutional and other contexts in the new society; their position between the old and the new world, whether as intended 'final' immigrants, or as transient trans-located migrants spending substantial time in two worlds, or as the young people 'left behind'; the experience of 'host' children and youth including those of earlier waves of immigration; the character of relations between 'host' and 'immigrant' youth; the role of state and community institutions in influencing the character of these relations; the immigrant young person's relationship to family and the mutual influences of young person and family around the migration experience

Keynote Speaker: Professor Rubén Rumbaut, University of California, Irvine.
