The early Irish harp

The early Irish harp is one of the most recognized of all musical instruments, thanks to its use as a national symbol and a trademark for beer, yet it is almost never heard and is as rarely studied by musicologists and scholars. The last article in this journal devoted to the early Irish harp was in May 1987, and previous to that, there was one in January 1983; there were passing references in May 2000 and in June 2006. These, however, only reinforce that there is still much misunderstanding and confusion about this instrument.

Firstly, it is useful to differentiate clearly between the early Irish harp and the neo-Irish harp. The latter was invented by John Egan in the early decades of the 19th century, and was rediscovered in the last decades of that century when the Gaelic revival demanded Romantic harps to accompany Gaelic singing in the parlours of Dublin and Edinburgh. Its ancestor is not the early Irish harp at all, but the orchestral pedal harp; John Egan was a pedal-harp maker, and his 'newly invented' 'Portable Irish harp' was equipped with the orchestral harp's gut strings and mechanical semitone-fretting mechanisms, so that classically trained polite aristocratic ladies could easily play it.

The show harps or lyres, and even if, in fact, they are illustrations of instruments at all. This lack of evidence has not stopped many confident assertions about the date and location of the invention of the harp, and about the supposedly clear distinction between Gaelic and other European harps.

Terminology

Terminology in this field is complex and ambiguous. I use 'early Irish harp' to refer to the historical instrument of sturdy shape and with metal wire strings. Especially in the 17th century, it was known in Britain and on the Continent as the 'Irish harp'. Since it was indigenous to the Highlands of Scotland as well as Ireland, a more inclusive modern terminology is 'Gaelic harp' or, to avoid offending present-day Gaels who prefer the Victorian revival instrument, 'early Gaelic harp'. Its name in Gaelic is clàirseach (Irish) or clarsach (Scots). In Scotland, the name 'clarsach' was used from the 13th century onwards to refer to the early Gaelic harp; since the Gaelic revival of the 1890s, 'clarsach' has instead been used for the modern replacement, and I have been using the term 'early clarsach'. Before the 13th century, the instrument seems to have been called...

Helpful Information for Trinity Students/Staff

Students and staff are invited to join us for one or more of these information sessions lasting no longer than 40 minutes (except for the EndNote class which will be 1 hour). If you have time, stay longer and we will answer any questions you have on the Library. No booking necessary. Please come along to the North Training Room in the Berkeley Basement.
Library HITS - Helpful Information for Trinity Students/Staff

If you're new to TCD or want to brush up on existing skills, join us for a series of taster sessions delivered by the Staff of the Library, and Student Learning & Development.

2018 Timetable

This year the HITS classes will take place over three modules:

1. Getting Started - 10-14 September and 17-21 September
2. Writing and Research Skills - 15-18 October
3. Brush up on your Library and Research Skills - 26th-30th November

While there is no need to book it is advisable to arrive on time to ensure a place.

All training sessions will take place in the North Training Room (NTR), Basement, Berkeley Library, unless otherwise indicated by STR - the adjacent South Training Room, or Global Room - located in the Watts Building near the Science Gallery.

All classes - with the exception of EndNote Desktop - will last about 50 minutes. EndNote Desktop classes will take about 90 minutes.

Introduction

In Tune aims to reveal the richness of Trinity College Library's music holdings by highlighting a selection of its most significant treasures, many of them unique or extremely rare. The Library's music collections have been built up over the course of four centuries, and in their range and diversity reflect a thousand years of Irish and European musical history.
