Fish Have No Feet

by Jón Kalman Stefánsson

Translated by Philip Roughton from the Icelandic and published by MacLehose Press, Fish Have No Feet is set in a once-thriving fishing community, now barren and fighting to stay afloat. Stefánsson's characters fall in and out of love as they try to find hope amidst the overshadowed realities of modern-day Iceland. Longlisted for the Man Booker Int'l Prize, 2017.

"Powerful and sparkling...An impassioned and lyrical read... [Stefánsson] brings out the history of a place and its people in a way few contemporary writers ever manage..."

-Nora Mahony, The Irish Times
