Introduction

There are no official records of the results of pre-1948 general elections in Ireland, published or even (it seems) unpublished, a lacuna that has been a handicap both to those conducting research into the political history of twentieth-century Ireland and to those whose interests lie in the working of Ireland's almost unique electoral system. In the 1920s and the 1930s, a pioneering effort to provide the sort of information that is nowadays taken for granted where recent elections are concerned was made by William J. Flynn in successive editions of his Oireachtas Companion and Saorstát Guide (later called Irish Parliamentary Handbook). These volumes, which are of course long out of print and virtually unobtainable, provide facts and figures on the deputies elected, officers of the Dáil, members of the government and so on, as well as some data on election results themselves. Except in a small number of cases, these are accurate as far as they go, but only first preferences are given; no details of transfers are provided. More recently, Brian Walker's Parliamentary Election Results in Ireland, 1918–92 (Dublin, 1992) contains results of all parliamentary elections in Ireland, north and south, for the period covered, together with a comprehensive index of candidates. While invaluable to all students of twentieth century Irish electoral politics, it, too, does not contain details of vote transfers. (For a list of relevant publications, see the bibliography at the end of this volume.)

Consequently, the only sources from which the full results can be obtained are newspapers. The Dublin-based dailies of the day rarely gave the full results for any constituency outside Dublin, which can be gleaned only from the provincial press. These papers vary in the quality of their coverage of the results; some carried complete details (occasionally reprinting in its entirety the official version supplied by the returning officer), while others provided, say, only the vote totals for each candidate after each count, from which the transfers each received, and the number of non-transferables, can be calculated. Results given in one newspaper have been cross-checked against others where possible. Most of the provincial newspapers were consulted in the National Library of Ireland, Kildare St, Dublin, to which thanks are due for the extensive use of its facilities. In addition, some newspapers were consulted in the British Newspaper Library in Colindale, London. However, it has proved impossible to track down 23 of the 314 constituency counts in full. Of the missing results, 1 is from 1922 (Tipperary North, South and Mid), 4 are from 1923 (Cork North, Galway, Limerick and Longford–Westmeath), 1 is from June 1927 (Dublin County), 2 are from 1932 (Limerick and Roscommon), 1 is from 1938 (Mayo North), 9 are from 1943 (Clare, Cork Borough, Dublin North-East, Dublin North-West, Dublin South, Dublin Townships, Dublin County, Mayo North and Wicklow) and 5 are from 1944 (Dublin North-West, Dublin South, Dublin Townships, Dublin County and Wicklow). In these cases, as much detail as is available on the result has been provided.

It should perhaps be noted that election results cannot simply be copied number-by-number from newspaper reports as if one were transcribing a historical document. Journalists were working under pressure and the occasional typo is inevitable. By checking each number against the other numbers, such typos can be corrected. To take an archetypal example, in the Donegal East constituency at the 1944 election, the source (details on p. 307) states that Daniel McMenamin won 6,126 first preferences, and on the second count received a transfer of 155 votes, taking his total to 6,181. Quite obviously, something is wrong here – but which figure is incorrect? Did he receive only 6,026 first preferences rather than the 6,126 stated, did he actually receive only 55 transfers rather than the 155 stated, or did the transfer of votes bring his second-stage total to 6,281 rather than the 6,181 stated? We can arrive at the correct conclusion by examining the rest of the count. The valid vote total is stated to be 33,012 and the quota is stated to be 6,603; both figures would be consistent with all the other information we have if McMenamin won 6,126 first preferences but not if he had won 6,026. The fact that Neal Blaney, who won 7,828 first preferences, had a stated surplus of 1,225, which was distributed on the second count, also logically implies a quota of 6,603. The sum of the votes transferred to other candidates on the second count was 1,170 votes, and their stated vote totals also increased by 1,170 votes, leaving 55 votes to be accounted for. On the third count, McMenamin is said to have received 31 votes, bringing his total to 6,212, again pointing to 6,181 as his correct second-count total. Hence, we can safely conclude that the figure of 155 given in the newspaper for the votes received by McMenamin on the second count is a typo and that the correct figure is 55. There are other cases as well, the most high-profile of which concerns the record first preference total won by Richard Mulcahy in Dublin North in 1923, which most newspapers reported as 22,205 but which the same process of deduction from the rest of the count shows must have been 22,005, with a surplus of 15,858.

The names of constituencies are straightforward enough, except that the constituency generally known throughout the 1922–44 period as Leix–Offaly is here called Laois–Offaly, in line with current usage. The names of candidates sometimes present more of a problem. In some cases it is difficult to establish the correct name of an individual. For example, the surname of the winner of the 1936 Galway by-election alternates between Neilan and Niland, while his forename is variously given as the presumably formal Martin and the more familiar Mattie. The name of a long-serving Fianna Fail TD from Mayo varied in Dáil reports between Clery, Cleary and Ó Cléirigh. In such instances an effort has been made to decide which version is the most reliable. In other cases, candidates simply used different versions of their names over time. Some added or dropped middle names—for example, the Monaghan TD generally known as Dr Conn Ward often appeared on the ballot paper as Francis Constantine Ward. Others appear to have switched between the Irish- and English-language versions of their names, such as Tadgh/Timothy Crowley in Limerick, James/Séamus Bourke in Tipperary or Finian/Fionán Lynch in Kerry.

A perennial issue is that of candidates who adopt or discard an O', presumably in the hope of gaining some advantage from achieving a higher position on the ballot paper (on which names appear in alphabetical order). This was a trick onto which politicians latched early. In the words of a reporter writing about the Donegal campaign of 1923: "There was some comment on the fact that Mr Joseph O'Doherty's nominators had eliminated the prefix 'O' from his name, and it was suggested that this was done so that the candidate's name would be near the top of the ballot paper" (Derry People 25 August 1923, p. 7). Some political Byrnes or Connors were O'Byrne or O'Connor outside the Dáil, while some Reillys became O'Reillys. The Fianna Fáil TD for Cork West is described in Dáil reports variously as Timothy (Ted) Sullivan and Ted O'Sullivan, while the Labour TD Johnny O'Leary appears there as Johnny Leary. In 1922, Kevin O'Higgins, contesting the Laois–Offaly constituency, is described in all official statements by the returning officer as Kevin Higgins. In the present publication there has been a degree of standardisation of names, although when candidates presented different versions of their forenames over time, this is reflected in what is contained here. The list of all TDs of the 1922–44 period included after the 1944 results should reduce the confusion.

Since 1979, the Republic of Ireland has held 5-yearly elections to the European Parliament, for which the country is divided into four constituencies: Connacht–Ulster, Dublin, the rest of Leinster, and Munster. [This ceased to be true after the 1999 election.] It has become standard to present voting figures for these four provinces/regions, and the practice is followed in the aggregated tables in this book. Connacht and the three Ulster counties in the Republic comprise the western and north-western part of the country, and during the 1922–44 period were characterised mainly by small-scale subsistence farming, carried out primarily by owner-occupiers. Dublin, as the capital city, was the most industrialised part of the country. The counties in the rest of Leinster and Munster varied markedly, but these provinces could be broadly characterised during the period covered as areas of large farming. The map at the back of the book shows the location of the counties and the composition of the provinces.

This volume is the first in the Political Studies Association of Ireland's series Sources for the Study of Irish Politics, whose aim is to make more widely available material that is at present difficult to obtain. Its publication has been generously supported by a grant from the Arts and Social Sciences Benefactions Fund (Trinity College Dublin); thanks are due to the Deans of the three faculties concerned (Arts (Humanities), Arts (Letters) and Business, Economic and Social Studies). [A second volume, Irish Elections 1948–77: results and analysis, was published in 2009 by Routledge in association with PSAI Press. Due to difficulties in accessing the original 1993 hard copies of Irish Elections 1922–44 it has now, in 2023, been made available as a free download, in the same format as the original and with only a few very minor amendments.]

All the figures in this publication have been extensively checked by computer, but given that coverage of the entire period generates a little over 170,000 digits (the range is from 27,322 occurrences of the digit 1 down to 12,289 occurrences of the digit 8) it would be optimistic to imagine that there are no errors. The editor would be grateful to be notified (at the Department of Political Science, Trinity College, Dublin 2) of any mistakes detected by readers. These will be corrected in any future printing.

A guide to the STV electoral system in Ireland

Voters are given a ballot paper containing the names of all candidates, in alphabetical order. Candidates' party affiliations, if any, did not appear on the ballot paper at elections before 1963. Voters put a "1" beside the name of their favourite candidate, and can rank as many of the other candidates as they wish (by placing "2", "3" and so on beside their names).

The counting of the votes revolves around the Droop quota, calculated as the lowest integer greater than $\frac{vv}{s+1}$, where vv is the number of valid votes and s the number of seats. Thus in Carlow–Kilkenny in 1922, where there were 31,227 valid votes and 4 seats to be filled, the number that the quota had to exceed was $\frac{31227}{4+1}$, or 6,245.4, and so the quota was set at 6,246. All candidates whose first preference vote total equals or exceeds the quota are declared elected.

Assuming that some seats are left unfilled, the count proceeds by distributing the "surplus" votes of elected candidates, in other words the votes they possess over and above the quota. These votes are distributed among the continuing candidates (i.e. those still in the count, having been neither elected nor eliminated), in proportion to the next "live" preferences marked (a live preference is defined as one for a continuing candidate). The precise number of votes transferred from an elected candidate A to another candidate B is given by the formula:

$$\frac{(\text{number of A's surplus votes}) * (\text{number of A's votes that contain a next live preference for B})}{\text{total number of A's votes that contain a live preference}}.$$

Thus, in Carlow–Kilkenny in 1922, we can calculate that among the votes cast for Gaffney that contained at least one live next preference, the proportion carrying a next preference for O'Sullivan was $\frac{2430}{4629}$, or 52.5 per cent.

The returning officer is not obliged (though is entitled) to distribute a surplus if this (together with any other undistributed surpluses) could not alter the position of the bottom two candidates, which is why in Carlow–Kilkenny in 1922 neither Cosgrave's nor Gorey's surplus was distributed on the third count. If a candidate is elected on the first count, all his or her votes are examined for their second preferences, but if the candidate is elected on a later count, only those in the last package received are examined. Thus, if the returning officer in Carlow–Kilkenny had distributed Gorey's surplus at some stage, he would have based the distribution on the next live preferences marked on the 469 votes that Gorey received from Gaffney rather than on all 6,591 votes in Gorey's possession.

If no candidate has a surplus, then the count proceeds by the elimination of the candidate with fewest votes. This candidate's papers are transferred according to the next live preference marked. Any paper without a preference for any of the continuing candidates becomes "non-transferable". The counting process continues until all the seats are filled by candidates attaining the quota (as happened in Carlow–Kilkenny), or until a candidate is declared elected because he or she can no longer be caught by any other candidate, as happened in Cork Borough in 1922, where MacSwiney was declared elected after the fifth count, despite not having reached the quota, as she could not possibly be overtaken by Beamish.

In the results presented in this volume, an asterisk (*) before a candidate's name denotes that the candidate was an outgoing TD.

The 1922 general election

The 1922 general election was the first election to take place in the independent Irish state, the first to be contested by the parties that, in modified form, have dominated Irish politics ever since, and the first contested general election held under the STV variant of proportional representation. In addition, the circumstances in which it was held produced a peculiar and highly restrained form of competition.

Elections to the second Dáil had taken place in May 1921, also under STV and using the same constituencies as were employed in 1922, but there were no contests in the area known from 1922 as the Irish Free State. The 26 territorial constituencies plus the National University returned 124 Sinn Féin candidates unopposed, and four Unionists were returned unopposed from Dublin University.

Sinn Féin split when the Anglo–Irish Treaty was debated (and passed by 64 votes to 57) by the Dáil in December 1921 and January 1922, and yet it still preserved a fragile existence as a party. Consequently, some members of both the pro- and anti-Treaty wings of the party made efforts to prevent the development of open competition between the two sides at the 1922 election, which was to be held on 16 June. These efforts culminated in the “Collins–de Valera Pact” of 20 May, under which each of the two wings would nominate in each constituency only as many candidates as it then had TDs (members of the Dáil), and a coalition government of the two wings would be formed after the election.

Only the inclusion of a clause acknowledging the right of other interests to stand prevented the election being a rerun of the 1921 non-contest, and gave the voters a chance to pass judgement on the Treaty. Even so, eight of the 28 constituencies were not contested, and the ratio of candidates to seats (just 1.4 candidates per seat) was lower than it has ever been since. The clear hope of most Sinn Féin TDs was that contests would be kept to a minimum. Although there was an element of self-interest in this, there was also a genuine feeling that the open expression of political division at such a critical juncture should be avoided at all costs.

In this sense, the election marked a contest between two groups with very different views on the place of politics. One saw Irish society in essentially monist terms, as innately conflict-free. It wanted any differences of opinion to be resolved within the framework of the all-encompassing “national movement”, and was suspicious of the very idea of political parties because the concept implied a fragmentation of the Irish people into different sections with different interests. The other took a more pluralist view, and saw the political process as existing in order to allow the peaceful resolution of conflicts that inevitably existed within Irish society. The fact that enough non-Sinn Féin candidates came forward to make the election a genuine test of the people’s will ensured that the second view prevailed, and established the new Irish state as a twentieth-century liberal democracy.

The electoral register was widely acknowledged to be not very accurate, something that partly accounts for the low turnout figure recorded. Men were entitled to vote if they had reached 21, but the franchise was extended to women only if they were aged 30 or more. University graduates could vote in both a university and a territorial constituency.

The results showed a clear victory for the pro-Treatyites over the anti-Treatyites. In the contested constituencies, the former won 41 seats and the latter only 19. Each anti-Treaty candidate won on average only 3,372 votes, compared with the pro-Treatyites’ average of 5,174 votes, and not a single anti-Treaty candidate headed the poll in any constituency. The non-Sinn Féin candidates, who received criticism and occasionally intimidation during the campaign for having dared to stand at all, generally fared well. Labour, indeed, has never subsequently equalled the 21.3 per cent of the votes it won in 1922. All but one of its candidates were elected (the other finished just eight votes short of a quota), and caution cost it certain seats in both Laois–Offaly and Louth–Meath, where its sole candidate won over two quotas. The Farmers Party won a seat in all but one of the constituencies it contested.

Analysis of the transfers (see p. 16) shows that supporters of each wing of Sinn Féin tended to give their lower preferences to candidates of the other wing. Transfers from non-Sinn Féin candidates tended to go in greater numbers to pro-Treatyites than to anti-Treatyites.

The results show that the electorate had relatively little difficulty in adjusting to the use of STV, with only about 3 per cent of votes being spoiled (see p. 17). Moreover, voters clearly grasped the power STV gave them to differentiate between candidates of a particular party. The most striking example of this comes from the Galway constituency, where the last seat lay between two anti-Treatyites, Frank Fahy and Liam Mellows. Fahy had recently made speeches “in favour of the restoration of order and goodwill”, in the words of a contemporary newspaper (Connacht Tribune, 24 June 1922), while Mellows was regarded as one of the most uncompromising of the republicans. Transfers from pro-Treaty and Labour candidates enabled Fahy to overhaul Mellows despite trailing him by more than 500 votes on first preferences.

The 1922 general election is significant in its own right from many perspectives. It marked the foundation of an enduring party system, given that both Fianna Fáil and Sinn Féin claim direct continuity from the anti-Treaty wing of the 1922 Sinn Féin, as can Fine Gael, via Cumann na nGaedheal, from the pro-Treatyites. The under-representation of women, which was to be a feature of Irish politics, was pronounced from the start, with only two of the 128 TDs elected being women. But perhaps the most important long-term consequence of the 1922 general election for Irish political history was that it asserted the primacy of the ballot box, at a time when this seemed very much in the balance.

Notes on 1922 election results

The available official figures for this election are very limited. It is stated in the First Annual Report 1922–25 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1927), pp. 114–15, that the total number of votes cast in the 19 contested territorial (i.e. non-University) constituencies was 638,682, of which 19,684 (3.08%) were invalid, “mainly on the grounds that the figure 1 indicating first preference was placed opposite the name of more than one candidate or else did not appear on the paper at all”. This implies a valid vote total, including the National University, of 621,634, which is 47 greater than in the table on p. 13; it has not been possible to identify the source of the discrepancy.

Eight constituencies were uncontested. Their electorates are not included in the aggregated provincial and national totals in the table on p. 13 above. The total electorate, inclusive of the uncontested constituencies, comes to 1,430,104. The figures given above for the total national electorate, and for the total electorate in the contested territorial constituencies, are confirmed in Department of Local Government and Public Health, First Annual Report 1922–25 (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1927), pp. 114–15, but no official figures are available for individual constituencies. The sources for electorates are contemporary newspapers.

Candidates had to deposit the sum of £150, which was forfeit by unsuccessful candidates whose first preference total did not exceed “one-eighth of the total number of valid votes polled when divided by the number of members to be elected for the constituency”. Four candidates lost their deposits. Three were anti-Treaty TDs (Childers in Kildare–Wicklow, Dee in Waterford–Tipperary East, and O’Byrne in Tipperary North, South and Mid); the fourth was an independent (Mandeville in Waterford–Tipperary East). Two other candidates failed to reach the requisite number of first preferences but did not lose their deposits, Milroy (Cavan) by being elected and Ó hAunracain (Cork Mid, North, South, South-East and West) as he had withdrawn before the election. The figure of four deposits lost agrees with that in Department of Local Government and Public Health, First Annual Report 1922–25 (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1927), p. 115. This criterion was based on British practice, and at the 1923 election a different criterion, better adapted to the STV electoral system, was introduced.

The 1923 general election

Due to the exceptional circumstances surrounding the 1922 election, and the rather inaccurate register on which it had been fought, there was general agreement on the need for a fresh election to be held once the Irish Free State Constitution came into operation in December 1922. As early as September 1922, the Dáil called on the government to prepare a register for a new election. The civil war, which lasted until May 1923, delayed the process, and the election did not take place until the late summer of 1923.

Some modifications were made to the electoral law. Franchise rights were given to women between 21 and 30, bringing about universal adult suffrage, and plural voting was abolished: university graduates were not entitled to remain on the register of both a university and a territorial constituency. The deposit was reduced from £150 to £100. The number of Dáil seats was increased from 128 to 153, and the constituency boundaries redrawn. There were now 28 territorial constituencies, along with the two university constituencies. These included three 8-seaters (in Donegal and Dublin) and a 9-seater in Galway, all of which were abolished after the next revision in 1935. No constituencies of comparable size have been created since then.

In 1922, the Collins–de Valera pact, coupled with a feeling that other interests should stand aside until the “national issue” was more clearly resolved, had kept contests to a minimum. With the constraints now gone, there was a flood of candidates: 376, over twice as many as in 1922, including 24 in the Galway constituency alone.

Although the civil war had ended, the political atmosphere remained tense. The anti-Treaty TDs elected in 1922 refused to recognise the legitimacy of the Dáil, and had not taken their seats. Many of their leaders were in jail or on the run, and Éamon de Valera was arrested when he emerged from hiding to address an election rally in Clare. The pro-Treaty forces had formed Cumann na nGaedheal in April 1923, and were now led by the solid but unspectacular William T. Cosgrave, following the deaths in summer 1922 of the more colourful Arthur Griffith and Michael Collins.

The 1923 election was more significant than is often recognised. It marked a vigorous effort by interest groups to win control of the Dáil, and to transform the whole basis of the Irish party system. Labour, which was still merely the political wing of the trade union movement, nominated over twice as many candidates as in 1922, and the Farmers’ Party, representing the Farmers’ Union, over four times as many as in 1922. In Dublin, business interests nominated five candidates who stood under the “Business Men” label (though it does not seem that any formal party organisation was established), and two more business candidates ran in Cork Borough. A common theme of the interest group campaigns was that it was time to set aside arguments over the Treaty, the oath and the status of the state, and to concentrate on economic growth and the distribution of resources within the state. Had this happened, as contemporary newspaper commentators expected it to, the subsequent shape of the Irish party system would have been very different.

But 1923 did not turn out to be the interest group election. Labour, which had been thought likely to win at least 30 seats, dropped to 14, and the Farmers won only 15, with four business candidates also being successful. Over a third of all candidates lost their deposits, the attrition rate being especially high among independents. Cumann na nGaedheal held its national share of the vote, and made a major advance in Dublin, where it won over half the votes. In Dublin North, Richard Mulcahy won 22,005 first preferences, which was to remain the highest number ever won by a general election candidate for over a century.

The anti-Treatyites, generally known in this election as the Republicans, proved more popular among the “plain people of Ireland” than among the political commentators of the day, winning more seats than all the interest groups combined. They were not to enter the Dáil for another four years, so Cumann na nGaedheal, with 63 TDs, had a comfortable de facto parliamentary majority. But the anti-Treatyites had demonstrated that they were not going to go away. By their strong performance, they demonstrated the continued vitality of the Treaty division, and ensured that this narrowly political/constitutional cleavage, rather than any socio-economic cleavage, was to be the dominant influence on the Irish party system.

LIMERICK
Note: These figures are undoubtedly very close to the correct figures, but may not be entirely accurate. Newspaper reports say that after the original first count (reported left), a “discrepancy” was detected, leading to a recount. The correct number of valid votes is probably 50,810 (see p. 50 below). Only partial information is available on the remaining sixteen counts. As well as Hayes, the other six candidates elected were Leddin (8,256 votes on the 2nd count), Carroll (6,451 on the 8th), Colbert (7,081 on the 12th), Nolan (7,361 or 7,631 on the 16th), Hogan (5,932) and Clancy (5,360), both on the 17th. Murphy was the runner-up, with 4,774 votes at that stage. The votes accredited to the other candidates at the time of their elimination were Mackey 143, Larkin 509, J. O’Brien 766, Cleary 996, O’Callaghan 1,159, W. O’Brien 1,273, Walshe 1,706, Laffin 2,197, Colivet 2,249, Quaide 2,468, Keyes 2,808 and Smyth 3,509.

LONGFORD–WESTMEATH

Note: This is one of only two cases among the pre-1948 contests (the other being in Limerick, also in 1923), where there is uncertainty about the precise first count figures. In their first reports, most provincial and national newspapers give (with minor variations) the following set of figures: Byrne 5,299; Gavin 1,150; Killane 2,757; Victory 1,634; Carrigy 708; McGuinness 3,454; Shaw 5,147; Redmond 1,285; Wilson 1,590; Garahan 1,991; Groarke 877; McKenna 3,274; Phillips 1,091; Lyons 4,452; O’Farrell 136. The valid vote total would then be 34,845 and the quota 5,808. However, later reports in many provincial papers concur on a valid vote total of 35,408 and a quota of 5,902, while not providing full details of individual candidates’ first preferences. This valid vote figure is almost certainly the correct one, given the Department of Local Government’s official record of the total number of valid votes cast (see p. 50 below). Such limited evidence as is available suggests that the additional 563 votes—which may have resulted from the late arrival or discovery of a ballot box—were spread over the entire field of candidates rather than all accruing to one. Consequently, the first preference figures given here are scaled-up versions of those listed above, each of which has been multiplied by 35,408 and divided by 34,845. For this reason, they cannot be regarded as entirely accurate; they are merely what seem to be the most plausible approximations. Information on later counts is also very sketchy. The candidates elected were Byrne (6,152 votes on the 6th count), along with Shaw (5,891), Lyons (5,793), Killane (5,569) and McKenna (5,434), all on the 10th. The runner-up was McGuinness (5,249). The order of eliminations was O’Farrell (with 138 votes when eliminated), Carrigy (735), Groarke (924), Phillips (1,203), Gavin (1,244), Redmond (1,396), Victory (1,851), Wilson (2,689) and Garahan (2,793).

Notes on 1923 election results

The electoral register was completed only on 10 August, seventeen days before the election, and the newspapers of the following three weeks published figures for the electorate in each constituency. The figures in different newspapers, and in Thom’s Official Directory, do not always coincide exactly, so the electorates given on p. 44 above cannot be treated as entirely reliable. The total figure given on that page excludes Dublin University; the figure inclusive of the Dublin University electorate would be 1,786,318. It appears that no accurate figures were ever published for the Cork constituencies, which the newspapers report as “estimates”. The total electorate given on p. 44 can be compared with the official figure (for the contested constituencies) of 1,785,436, which is given in the First Annual Report 1922–1925 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1927), p. 119.

The total number of votes cast at the election came to 1,093,996, of which 40,047 (3.66%) were rejected as invalid. The official valid vote total (given in the First Annual Report 1922–1925 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1927), p. 119) was thus 1,053,949. This is six votes fewer than the figure given in the table on p. 44; the discrepancy is almost certainly due to the absence of reliable first preference figures for Limerick (see p. 37—see also the comments on Longford–Westmeath on the same page). The turnout figures given in the table on p. 45 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate.

Candidates outside the four main parties, classified together in the above tables under the heading “Others”, contested the election under a variety of labels, which are generally indicated in the detailed constituency results. Apart from the Progressive Association in Cork Borough, both of whose candidates were elected, three others warrant mention:

	Votes	%
Business Men
Dublin North	2,594	4.69
Dublin South	1,277	2.77
Dublin County	5,777	10.07
Ireland	9,648	0.92	5 candidates; 2 elected; 2 lost deposits
National Democratic Party
Cork West	1,336	4.49
Laois–Offaly	3,494	8.67
Longford–Westmeath	138	0.39
Ireland	4,968	0.47	4 candidates; 0 elected; 3 lost deposits
Dublin Trades Council
Dublin North	2,648	4.79
Dublin South	1,199	2.60
Ireland	3,847	0.37	4 candidates; 0 elected; 3 lost deposits

Candidates had to deposit the sum of £100, which was returned to them if their votes at any stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota (this provision remained unaltered up to and including the 1989 general election). There are no official figures on the number of lost deposits.

The government

The fourth Dáil met on 19 September 1923. Michael Hayes was elected Ceann Comhairle, and, on 25 September, Pádraic O'Máille was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle. W. T. Cosgrave was elected President of the Executive Council, without a division. The ministers appointed were as follows:

President:	W. T. Cosgrave
Vice-President:	Kevin O'Higgins
Defence:	Richard Mulcahy
Education:	Eoin MacNeill
External Affairs:	Desmond FitzGerald
Finance:	Ernest Blythe
Home Affairs:	Kevin O'Higgins
Industry and Commerce:	Joseph McGrath
Agriculture:	Patrick Hogan
Fisheries:	Finian Lynch
Local Government:	Séamus Bourke
Postmaster-General:	J. J. Walsh

Bourke, Hogan, Lynch and Walsh were extern ministers, i.e. they were not members of the Executive Council.

The June 1927 general election

Several changes had taken place in the political landscape since 1923. The most important was a regrouping of the anti-Treaty forces. In March 1926 the Sinn Féin party had split on the question of whether, as a majority insisted, taking its seats in the Dáil was to be ruled out in all circumstances. The defeated minority, led by Éamon de Valera, had broken away and in May 1926 formed the Fianna Fáil party. As of June 1927, de Valera and his followers still had not entered the Dáil, but during the election campaign there were many signs that such a step was imminent. In contrast, Sinn Féin was contesting the election on a platform that ruled out participation in the institutions of the Irish Free State. The Republican TDs elected in 1923 split fairly evenly between the two parties.

The Cumann na nGaedheal government retained a secure majority throughout the lifetime of the fourth Dáil due to the continued abstention of the Republicans, but it suffered difficulties during this period. In March 1924 the “army mutiny” took place and a number of TDs left the party, eventually resigning their seats and precipitating a spate of by-elections. Indeed, the large number of by-elections held between the 1923 and June 1927 general elections (21 vacancies were filled during this period, only four of which were caused by deaths, including one suicide) emphasises the fluid nature of party politics at this time. An exceptionally high number of TDs (29, including four of the five “business” candidates elected in 1923) did not contest the election, another sign that the new political class was still in the process of definition.

Cumann na nGaedheal’s style of government managed to antagonise an ever-increasing number of interests, and some of these rallied at the June 1927 election behind the National League. The League had been formed in September 1926 under the leadership of William Redmond, and appeared to mark an attempt to revive the old Irish Parliamentary Party. However, it also developed policies in favour of the rights of tenants and publicans, winning the endorsement of groups representing both interests. Another small party to contest the election was Clann Éireann, which favoured much the same policies as Fianna Fáil. Altogether 377 candidates went forward, one more than in 1923, a total that was to be exceeded only once in the next fifty years.

The election results were notable in four respects. First, volatility was exceptionally high, reflecting the still somewhat inchoate nature of the battle lines of the party system: only four of the thirty constituencies returned TDs of the same persuasion as in 1923, and 66 of the 153 TDs elected were newcomers to the Dáil. Second, on the anti-Treaty side Fianna Fáil practically retained the 1923 Republican vote (making sizeable gains in each of the Dublin constituencies in particular) and completely eclipsed Sinn Féin, which won only 5 seats. Third, Cumann na nGaedheal slumped to little more than a quarter of the votes, with especially heavy losses in Dublin. Fourth, the two main parties thus won just 54 per cent of the votes between them, the lowest level to which they have ever dropped at a general election as of 1993, and in only six of the twenty-eight territorial constituencies did they win as many as 60 per cent of the votes between them. The June 1927 election displayed a higher level of both electoral and legislative fractionalisation than any other Irish election in the twentieth century.

Volatility (average per constituency)	24.9		20.2		25.0		24.5		23.5

Note: The Republican vote of 1923 is used as the basis of comparison with Fianna Fáil support.

Volatility in each constituency is calculated as the sum of the percentage gains of those parties that have made gains.

Parties' best and worst performances in June 1927, relative to 1923

Note: Cases where a party ran no candidates in both June 1927 and 1923 are excluded.

The Republican vote of 1923 is used as the basis of comparison with Fianna Fáil support. The list of Fianna Fáil's worst constituencies excludes Cork North, where Daniel Corkery's classification as an independent republican and the absence of an official Fianna Fáil candidate means that the party's vote here dropped by 30.7 per cent.

For the first five parties and Others, the left-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had at least one candidate available to receive transfers, while the right-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had no candidates available to receive transfers. Sinn Féin did not run more than one candidate in any constituency.

Calculations are based on transfers in the twenty-nine contested constituencies for which full results are available, ie all except Dublin County.

Notes on June 1927 election results

The total number of votes cast was 1,177,797, of which 31,337 (2.66 per cent) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 84 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The national figures for electorates and valid votes given on p. 83 are confirmed by Department of Local Government and Public Health, Third Report (1927–28) (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1929), pp. 15–16.

The figures for Others include the votes for Clann Éireann, which were as follows:

	Votes	%
Clann Éireann
Dublin North	234	0.37
Galway	1,809	3.13
Kerry	484	0.90
Leitrim–Sligo	523	1.05
Longford–Westmeath	923	2.44
Monaghan	1,399	4.53
National University	155	7.21
Ireland	5,527	0.48	8 candidates; 0 elected; 7 lost deposits

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The total number of 98 lost deposits given on pp. 85 and 90 agrees with that in the Third Report (1927–1928) of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1929), p. 16.

Note: Forty-four Republican TDs were elected in 1923, and this group had risen to 45 by June 1927. It has not proved possible to ascertain reliably the individual affiliations (if any) of each of the 12 Republican TDs who did not contest the election. The breakdown given here, to the effect that 23 TDs stayed with Sinn Féin while 22 joined Fianna Fáil, is taken from Thomas P. O'Neill, "In search of a political path: Irish republicanism, 1922 to 1927", pp. 147–71 in G. A. Hayes-McCoy (ed.), Historical Studies 10 (Dublin: Irish Committee of Historical Sciences, 1976), p. 170.

The government

The fifth Dáil met on 23 June 1927. Michael Hayes was elected Ceann Comhairle, and, on 1 July, James Dolan was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle.

W. T. Cosgrave was elected President of the Executive Council, by 68 votes to 22. Those supporting the nomination were 44 of the Cumann na nGaedheal TDs (the exceptions being Cosgrave, Desmond FitzGerald and Michael Hayes), all 11 Farmers' Party TDs, and 13 independent TDs (Alton, Brennan, Byrne, Cooper, Craig, Daly, Haslett, Hewson, Keogh, Myles, O'Hanlon, Thrift and Wolfe). Those voting against were the 22 Labour TDs.

The ministers appointed were as follows:

President:	W. T. Cosgrave
Vice-President:	Kevin O'Higgins
Defence:	Desmond FitzGerald
Education:	John Marcus O'Sullivan
External Affairs:	Kevin O'Higgins
Finance:	Ernest Blythe
Fisheries:	Finian Lynch
Industry and Commerce:	Patrick McGilligan
Justice:	Kevin O'Higgins
Lands and Agriculture:	Patrick Hogan
Local Government and Public Health:	Richard Mulcahy
Posts and Telegraphs:	J. J. Walsh

The September 1927 general election

The three months of the fifth Dáil were dramatic ones. On 10 July Kevin O'Higgins was assassinated; he had ranked second in the government after Cosgrave, being responsible for External Affairs and Justice as well as holding the title of Vice-President of the Executive Council. In response the government introduced a bill whose effect would be to invalidate the nomination of any Dáil election candidate who did not promise to take the oath stipulated by the terms of the Treaty if elected.

On 11 August the Fianna Fáil TDs took their seats in the Dáil, thereby conferring almost universal legitimacy upon that institution. Five days later Fianna Fáil joined with Labour and the National League in a no confidence motion. The government survived, but only on the casting vote of the Ceann Comhairle, and it was obvious that it had no long-term prospects. Consequently, it was no surprise when the Dáil was dissolved and fresh elections were called.

The incidence of two general elections within such a short period made life very difficult for the smaller parties and independents. The number of candidates outside the largest two parties plummeted from 193 in June to a mere 88, as the smaller groups sensed that the mood of the country was not sympathetic to another highly fractionalised Dáil and lacked the resources and enthusiasm to fight lost causes.

Cumann na nGaedheal was faced with a major embarrassment when Posts and Telegraphs minister J. J. Walsh did not stand for re-election in Cork Borough and made no secret of his disenchantment with the government's opposition to protectionist policies. To fill the breach, Cosgrave stood in Cork Borough as well as in his own Carlow–Kilkenny constituency; this was to be the last time a major political figure stood in more than one constituency in a general election, a practice that had been common in the nineteenth century.

The future lines of the party system became much more rigidly defined, as the political picture, hitherto highly fluid, settled down into a pattern whose outlines were very clear. Both major parties made large advances—in contrast to the June election, they won more than 60 per cent of the votes in 22 of the 28 territorial constituencies—while all other groups fell back. Cumann na nGaedheal gained votes in every constituency (its advance being greatest in Dublin) and Fianna Fáil in every constituency except Dublin County; neither party lost a seat in any constituency. Labour, having won nearly half as many votes as Fianna Fáil in June, now had barely a quarter of Fianna Fáil's support, as was to be the broad pattern for the next sixty-five years. Moreover, the Labour leader, Thomas Johnson, lost his seat in Dublin County, and he was succeeded by T. J. O'Connell, whose own seat in Mayo South was very vulnerable. The no confidence motion in August had the effect of altering the relationship between the parties, and for the first time Labour transfers flowed in greater numbers to Fianna Fáil than to Cumann na nGaedheal candidates.

In the new Dáil Cumann na nGaedheal, despite gaining 15 seats, needed to enter into a formal alliance with the Farmers' Party (whose leader became a junior minister (then termed a 'Parliamentary Secretary')) in order to remain in office. Despite its numerically tenuous position, though, its tenure in office was not seriously challenged, and the sixth Dáil was to last until 1932.

Notes on September 1927 election results

The figure for the total electorate given on p. 114 excludes Dublin University (uncontested constituency). The electorate inclusive of Dublin University was 1,730,177. The total number of votes cast was 1,192,755, of which 21,886 (1.83%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 115 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The national figures for electorates and valid votes are confirmed by Department of Local Government and Public Health, Third Report (1927–28) (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1929), p. 16.

Candidates had to deposit the sum of £100, which was returned to them if their votes at any stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The total number of lost deposits given in the tables on pp. 116 and 121 agrees with that in Department of Local Government and Public Health, Third Report (1927–28) (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1929), p. 97.

The government

The sixth Dáil met on 11 October 1927. Michael Hayes was elected Ceann Comhairle, and, on 27 October, Patrick Hogan (Clare) was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle.

W. T. Cosgrave was elected President of the Executive Council, by 76 votes to 70. Those supporting the nomination were 60 Cumann na nGaedheal TDs (Cosgrave could vote only once, and Hayes was Ceann Comhairle), all 6 Farmers' Party TDs, and 10 independent TDs (Alton, Byrne, Cole, Craig, Good, Haslett, Myles, O'Hanlon, Thrift and Wolfe). Those opposing it were all 57 Fianna Fáil TDs and all 13 Labour TDs.

The ministers appointed were as follows:

President:	W. T. Cosgrave
Vice-President:	Ernest Blythe
Defence:	Desmond FitzGerald
Education:	John Marcus O'Sullivan

The 1932 general election

The 1932 election was called a few months before it was due, at a time of considerable political tension. Paramilitary activity was rising, and in late 1931 the government introduced draconian security legislation, involving military tribunals that could impose the death penalty. Shortly before the election, with rather characteristic heavy-handedness, it prosecuted the Fianna Fáil newspaper the Irish Press before a tribunal on a charge of seditious libel. It also introduced a budget that raised taxes and adumbrated cuts in public service pay.

Fianna Fáil entered the election in confident mood, having won two of the three most recent by-elections. It had added policies on social and economic issues to its long-standing commitment to amend the constitution, and expected to capitalise on the unpopularity of the government. Labour's fortunes were at a low ebb, and it ran only 33 candidates, while the Farmers' Party was on the verge of extinction, several of its TDs having defected to Cumann na nGaedheal.

The Cumann na nGaedheal vote slipped a few points, while Fianna Fáil advanced strongly all over the country, becoming the first party to win more than 40 per cent of the votes at a general election. It gained votes in every constituency, and whereas it had headed Cumann na nGaedheal in only 11 of the 28 territorial constituencies in September 1927, it was now ahead in 21. Moreover, its more considered policies had evoked a response from National University graduates, who had hitherto given fairly solid backing to Cumann na nGaedheal.

Turnout increased in every constituency—the increase was greatest in Connacht–Ulster, but, as Richard Sinnott points out (Irish Voters Decide: voting behaviour in elections and referendums 1918–92 (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1994), chapter 9) this was due less to any “mobilisation of the periphery” than to the fact that prior to 1932 the electoral register in many western counties had been highly inflated, so pre-1932 turnout figures for Connacht–Ulster are artificially low.

Fianna Fáil was still short of a Dáil majority, but with Labour support Éamon de Valera was elected President of the Executive Council when the new Dáil met, and the party entered office. Unfounded rumours that some kind of coup might be staged to prevent it taking over led some Fianna Fáil TDs to take guns with them to the Dáil chamber. The smooth transfer of power that actually took place further confirmed the legitimacy of the Free State's political institutions, and testified to the strength of parliamentarianism and constitutionalism in Irish political culture.

Note: No information is available on the details of the fifth count, the distribution of MacDermot’s surplus of 418. It evidently did not alter the relative positions of the three Fianna Fáil candidates, so Boland and O’Rourke were elected. It appears that the returning officer then proceeded, for no obvious reason, with the elimination of the runner up, O’Dowd, and the distribution of his transfers, and as a result O’Rourke’s vote total stood at 10,289 on the sixth count, with Boland on 9,237.

The left-hand figure in each column is the number of seats, the right-hand figure the number of candidates.

University seats (six of these) and candidates (seven of these) are included in overall totals but not in provincial totals.

The outgoing Ceann Comhairle, returned automatically, was a Cumann na nGaedheal TD for the National University.

For the first three parties and Others, the left-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had at least one candidate available to receive transfers, while the right-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had no candidates available to receive transfers. The Farmers Party did not run more than one candidate in any constituency.

Inter-party relationships:

Fianna Fáil to Labour (Labour candidate, but no FF candidate, available to receive FF transfers). Total FF votes transferred 5,896; received by Labour 1,995 (33.8%).
Labour to Fianna Fáil (FF candidate, but no Labour candidate, available to receive Labour transfers). Total Labour votes transferred 39,346; received by FF 18,663 (47.4%).

Calculations are based on transfers in the twenty-seven contested constituencies for which full results are available (i.e. all except Limerick and Roscommon).

Notes on 1932 election results

[Note from 2023: the various summary figures for the 1932 election differ from those in the original 1993 book in two respects. The affiliation of a candidate in Laois–Offaly has been corrected from Farmers Party to independent. A candidate in Leitrim–Sligo who won 1,984 first preferences was correctly labelled as independent but in all summary tables he was erroneously treated as if he had been a Farmers candidate. The summary tables for votes, candidatures, transfers and so on all now reflect the corrected classifications.]

The figure for the total electorate given on p. 146 excludes Dublin University (uncontested constituency)—the figure including Dublin University would be 1,695,175. The total number of votes cast was 1,294,830, of which 20,804 (1.61%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 147 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The national figures for electorates and valid votes are confirmed by Report 1931–1932 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1933), pp. 13 and 15.

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The Report 1931–1932 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1933), p. 16, states that 37 deposits were lost, one more than in the tables on pp. 148 and 153. It has not been possible to identify the source of the discrepancy.

The government

The seventh Dáil met on 9 March 1932. Frank Fahy was elected Ceann Comhairle, and, on 15 March, Patrick Hogan (Clare) was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle. Éamon de Valera was elected President of the Executive Council, by 81 votes to 68. Those supporting the nomination were 71 Fianna Fáil TDs (the exception being Fahy), all 7 Labour TDs, plus 3 independents (Dillon, O’Hanlon and O’Shaughnessy). Those opposing the nomination were 55 Cumann na nGaedheal TDs (the exceptions being John Daly, who had died, and James Fitzgerald-Kenney), 2 Farmers’ Party TDs (O’Donovan and Vaughan), and 11 independent TDs (Alton, Anthony, Brasier, Byrne, Coburn, Craig, Good, Morrissey, Myles, Thrift and Wolfe).

The ministers appointed were as follows:

President:	Éamon de Valera
Vice-President:	Seán T. O’Kelly
Agriculture:	James Ryan
Defence:	Frank Aiken
Education:	Thomas Derrig
External Affairs:	Éamon de Valera

The 1933 general election

Éamon de Valera caught his political opponents, and most of his friends, by surprise when he called a “snap” election in January 1933, only eleven months after the last one. The opposition was in some disarray. Cumann na nGaedheal had yet to come to terms with the reasons for its rejection by the electorate, and had proved a very negative opposition. The remnants of the Farmers’ Party, along with some independent TDs, were in the process of establishing a new party; only when the election was called did they decide, hastily, that it would be called the National Centre Party. Labour—under a new leader, William Norton, T. J. O’Connell having lost his seat in Mayo in 1932—nominated only 19 candidates and there were just 13 independents, the lowest number yet.

The campaign was a tense one. Many IRA prisoners jailed under the previous government had been released by Fianna Fáil, and some were now involved in attempts to break up Cumann na nGaedheal campaign meetings, using the slogan “No free speech for traitors”. The Army Comrades Association, soon to be known as the Blueshirts, fought running battles with IRA supporters across the country. The high degree of polarisation was shown both by the level of turnout (over 80 per cent, still a record for an Irish election) and by the pattern of transfers, which demonstrated emphatically that the party system consisted of two blocs, one composed of Fianna Fáil and Labour and the other of Cumann na nGaedheal and the National Centre Party. This can be seen clearly in the remarkably high rate at which transfers passed between parties of the same bloc in many constituencies, something that was especially pronounced in Carlow–Kilkenny, Cavan, Cork Borough, Dublin North, Limerick, Roscommon and Wicklow, and in the low number of transfers passing between the two blocs.

Fianna Fáil’s appeal for an overall majority to implement its programme was successful. The party gained five seats, thus achieving 77 out of the 153 seats—the first time any party had won a majority. It made gains in all but six constituencies, with especially large advances in Dublin, and, remarkably, polled more than two-thirds of the votes in Kerry. Cumann na nGaedheal slipped back further, with particularly heavy losses in Leinster outside Dublin, and Labour dropped to what as of 1993 is still its lowest share of the votes, 5.7 per cent, and was left without a seat in Dublin, though it picked up two seats elsewhere. The new National Centre Party performed creditably, taking 11 seats, and looked set for a bright future.

Notes on 1933 election results

The figure for the total electorate on p. 175 excludes Dublin University (uncontested constituency)—the figure including Dublin University is 1,727,680. The total number of votes cast was 1,401,265, of which 14,707 (1.05%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 176 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The figures for electorates and valid votes in each constituency are confirmed by the Report 1932–1933 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1934), pp. 194–5.

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The figure of 16 lost deposits given on pp. 177 and 182 agrees with that in the Report 1932–1933 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1934), p. 12.

The government

The eighth Dáil met on 8 February 1933. Frank Fahy was elected Ceann Comhairle and, on 1 March, Patrick Hogan (Clare) was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle. Éamon de Valera was elected President of the Executive Council, by 82 votes to 54. Those supporting the nomination were 74 Fianna Fáil TDs (the exceptions being Patrick Boland, Fahy and Martin Ryan), and all 8 Labour TDs. Those opposing the nomination were 45 Cumann na nGaedheal TDs (the exceptions being Brennan, Doyle and O'Connor), and all 9 independent TDs.

The ministers appointed were as follows:

President:	Éamon de Valera
Vice-President:	Seán T. O'Kelly
Agriculture:	James Ryan
Defence:	Frank Aiken
Education:	Thomas Derrig
External Affairs:	Éamon de Valera
Finance:	Seán MacEntee
Industry and Commerce:	Seán F. Lemass
Justice:	Patrick J. Ruttledge
Lands and Fisheries:	Joseph Connolly (Senator)
Local Government and Public Health:	Seán T. O'Kelly
Posts and Telegraphs:	Gerald Boland

The 1937 general election

The 1937 election was fought on a new set of constituency boundaries. A revision effected in 1935 had entailed several significant changes. The six University seats were switched from the Dáil to the Seanad, and the size of the Dáil was reduced from 153 to 138 seats. At the same time, the number of constituencies was increased from 30 to 34. District magnitude (the average number of seats per constituency) thus dropped from just over five, the number that research suggests is necessary if proportional outcomes are to be achieved, to just 4.1. The largest constituencies (Donegal, Dublin North, Dublin County and Galway) were divided into two or three smaller ones, and now only three constituencies returned more than five deputies.

The political temperature had cooled considerably since 1933, when it had seemed that civil war might be in the air. Fianna Fáil's style of government over the previous four years, and its 1936 proscription of the IRA, had dispelled some of the fears that had been felt by the middle class in 1933. The party also benefited from the traumas undergone by its main opponent. In September 1933 Cumann na nGaedheal and the National Centre Party, along with the quasi-fascist National Guard or Blueshirts, had merged to form Fine Gael. After an unhappy year, the Blueshirt leader Eoin O'Duffy was removed from the leadership of Fine Gael and was replaced by William T. Cosgrave.

The results of the election showed some slippage in support for Fianna Fáil, but the party still won half the seats and was able to form a government. Fine Gael won a lower share of the votes than its constituent parts had received in 1933, and only Labour, which almost doubled its vote share, found much to celebrate. Turnout fell throughout the country.

The election took place on the same day as a referendum to replace the Irish Free State constitution with a new constitution, Bunreacht na hÉireann. This was passed by 685,105 votes to 526,945. Among other provisions, it specified (in Article 16.2) that Dáil elections be carried out by means of the single transferable vote and that no constituency might return fewer than three TDs.

Keely was an outgoing TD for Galway.

Note: There is no record of any further counts, even though the difference between the votes of Hogan, the last elected candidate, and Shalloo, the runner up, after the seventh count was less than the sum of the undistributed surpluses.

Notes on 1937 election results

The total number of votes cast was 1,352,273, of which 27,824 (2.06%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 208 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The figures for electorates and valid votes in each constituency given on p. 207 are confirmed by the Report 1937–38 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1939), pp. 141–2.

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The Report 1937–38 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1939), p. 16, states that 29 deposits were forfeit, 3 fewer than the figure given on pp. 209 and 213. It has not been possible to identify the source of the discrepancy.

The 1938 general election

As after the 1932 election, Éamon de Valera was dissatisfied with his lack of an overall majority in 1937–38, and gladly took the opportunity to call a fresh election when his government sustained a defeat in a Dáil vote concerning the idea of an arbitration scheme for civil service salaries. The campaign naturally revolved around Fianna Fáil's insistence that it needed an overall majority, but the electoral system also became an issue. De Valera, in a speech early in the campaign, criticised PR and hinted at a preference for the first past the post method in single-member constituencies. Fine Gael and Labour both spoke out in support of the existing electoral system and accused Fianna Fáil of seeking to entrench itself permanently in power.

The results of the election suggested that Fianna Fáil hardly needed a new electoral system. The party won nearly 52 per cent of the votes, the strongest performance by any Irish party in a general election to date, and a remarkable performance by the standards of any country holding competitive elections. Fianna Fáil gained votes in all but two constituencies, was the strongest party in all but three constituencies, and won more than 60 per cent of the votes in five constituencies. Neither Fine Gael nor Labour lost many votes, although each fell back by a few seats. Would-be candidates outside the three main parties found the prospect of fighting a second election in less than a year a daunting one, and only 11 entered the fray, seven of them successfully.

Notes on 1938 election results

The total number of votes cast was 1,302,070, of which 15,811 (1.21%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 235 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The figure for the electorate in Connacht–Ulster given on p. 234 excludes Donegal West and that for Munster excludes Kerry South, while the figure for Ireland excludes them both, as they were uncontested constituencies. The total electorate including both uncontested constituencies would be 1,770,422. The figures for electorates and valid votes in each constituency are confirmed by the Report 1938–39 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1940), pp. 111–12.

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The Report 1938–39 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1940), p. 16, states that 19 deposits were forfeit, 1 fewer than the figure given on pp. 236 and 241. It has not been possible to identify the source of the discrepancy.

The government

The tenth Dáil met on 30 June 1938. Frank Fahy was elected Ceann Comhairle and, on 5 July, Finian Lynch was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle. Éamon de Valera was elected Taoiseach by 75 votes to 45. The nomination was supported by 74 Fianna Fáil TDs (the exceptions were Patrick Boland, Fahy and Robert Ryan) and one independent (Hannigan). It was opposed by 44 Fine Gael TDs (the exception being Broderick) and Alfred Byrne (jnr).

The ministers appointed were as follows:

Taoiseach:	Éamon de Valera
Tánaiste:	Seán T. O'Kelly
Agriculture:	James Ryan
Defence:	Frank Aiken
Education:	Thomas Derrig
External Affairs:	Éamon de Valera
Finance:	Seán MacEntee
Industry and Commerce:	Seán F. Lemass
Justice:	Patrick J. Ruttledge

The 1943 general election

The tenth Dáil was Ireland's "Long Parliament", lasting its full five years. The outbreak of the second world war in September 1939 had had a dampening effect on political behaviour. By-elections were held to fill the seats of the two TDs who died before the war began, but thereafter vacancies were left unfilled, as a result of which some seats lay empty for over three years.

Campaigning in 1943 was difficult because of wartime shortages, especially of paper and fuel. This, combined with Fianna Fáil's ability to use the argument that a change of government would be unwise at a time of crisis ("Don't Change Horses while Crossing the Stream"), could have led to a low-key, ritualistic campaign. Instead, the number of candidates was higher than at any election since 1927—leading, among other things, to a record 21-stage count in the Tipperary constituency. Both Fine Gael and Labour nominated more candidates than in 1938, and they were joined in their assault on the government by Clann na Talmhan (Party of the Land), which had been formed in June 1939 and most of whose support came from small farmers.

The Fianna Fáil vote dropped in every constituency and by over ten percentage points overall. The party's losses were least in Dublin, which, in a reversal of the pattern of the previous 21 years, now became its strongest area. Fine Gael also fell back by over ten per cent, and it sustained a net loss of 13 seats. The smaller parties fared better. Labour pushed its vote total up to its highest level since 1922, and nearly doubled its number of TDs. Clann na Talmhan performed exceptionally well for a new party, and ate into the small farmer support of both major parties, especially in the west of Ireland. Both Labour and Clann na Talmhan abstained in the vote on a Taoiseach when the Dáil met, allowing Éamon de Valera to remain in office at the head of a minority Fianna Fáil administration.

For each party and for Others, the left-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had at least one candidate available to receive transfers, while the right-hand column shows the distribution of transfers in situations where the party had no candidate available to receive transfers.

Calculations are based on transfers in the twenty-five constituencies for which full results are available (i.e. all except Clare, Cork Borough, Dublin North-East, Dublin North-West, Dublin South, Dublin Townships, Dublin County, Mayo North and Wicklow).

Notes on 1943 election results

The total number of votes cast was 1,347,907, of which 16,198 (1.20%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 268 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. The figures for electorates and valid votes in each constituency given on p. 267 are confirmed by the Report 1943–44 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1945), pp. 162–3.

Wartime shortages of newsprint meant that newspapers were compelled to cut down on their election coverage, which accounts for the relatively high number of constituencies for which complete results are not available. As has often been noted, there are problems in determining which candidates represented Clann na Talmhan and which were representatives of county farmers’ associations or merely “independent farmers”. Some accounts differ from the results given here by treating Mahony (Kilkenny) and Heskin and Norris (Waterford) as Clann na Talmhan candidates and/or by treating McArdle (Monaghan) as an independent farmer. However, every attempt has been made, principally by examining candidates’ advertisements and presentation in the local press, to ensure that the affiliations recorded here are as reliable as possible.

Candidates outside the four main parties are classified in the above tables under the heading “Others”. Two minor parties ran a number of candidates, as shown below:

	Votes	%
Córas na Poblachta
Clare	700	1.45
Dublin North-East	581	1.49
Dublin South	1,314	2.47
Tipperary	1,297	1.98

Louth	585	1.89
Waterford	926	2.34
Ireland	3,137	0.24	4 candidates; 0 elected; 4 lost deposits

Candidates had to deposit £100, which was forfeit unless their votes at some stage of the count exceeded one third of the quota. The Report 1943–44 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1945), p. 108, agrees that 108 deposits were forfeit.

The government

The eleventh Dáil met on 1 July 1943. Frank Fahy was elected Ceann Comhairle and, on 20 October, Daniel McMenamin was elected Leas-Cheann Comhairle. On 2 July Éamon de Valera was elected Taoiseach by 67 votes to 37. Those supporting the nomination were 66 Fianna Fáil TDs (all except Fahy) plus the independent Maguire. The opponents were all 32 Fine Gael TDs and five independents (Anthony, Byrne snr, Byrne jnr, Cole and Dillon).

The ministers appointed were as follows:

Taoiseach:	Éamon de Valera
Tánaiste:	Seán T. O'Kelly
Agriculture:	James Ryan
Co-ordination of Defensive Measures:	Frank Aiken
Defence:	Oscar Traynor
Education:	Thomas Derrig

The 1944 general election

Given Éamon de Valera's record of holding "snap" elections in 1933 and 1938, on each occasion transforming a minority government into one with an overall majority, it was no surprise when he took a defeat in the Dáil on 9 May 1944 as his cue to call a fresh general election.

The opposition was in more than usual disarray. Fine Gael was suffering from a leadership vacuum—W. T. Cosgrave had stepped down in January 1944, but his designated successor, Richard Mulcahy, was not a TD, having lost his Dublin seat at the previous election. Labour was in even worse shape. A dispute within the trade union movement had spilled over into the Labour Party, which had split, with five Labour TDs (each of them a member of Ireland's largest trade union, the ITGWU) leaving the party at the start of 1944 to form the National Labour Party. The new party claimed that Labour had become "infested by Communists", whereas National Labour was "irrevocably committed to the Papal Encyclicals".

Of course, it should not be thought that campaigning revolved entirely around national issues. An archetypal example of local campaigning came from outgoing TD John B. Healy (a solicitor) in South Kerry, who placed an advertisement in the local newspaper (Kerryman 27 May 1944) purporting to come from a pensioner who signed himself "Seán Phaddy Shéamus". It read: "I am 76 and up to last August was only getting 7 shillings Old Age Pension. All because I had the grass of four cows and six or seven sheep. Over five years my case was taken up by two TDs, but I got nothing. John Healy was only six weeks in the Dáil when I got my 10 shillings. He will do for any pensioner what he did for me". The increase in Healy's vote can no doubt be attributed to the sophistication of his campaigning strategy.

At national level, de Valera's strategy also worked perfectly. Among the opposition parties only Clann na Talmhan gained votes, though it lost two seats. The divided Labour parties won fewer votes and seats than united Labour had won in 1943. Fine Gael's support slipped even further—only in Dublin Townships and Sligo did the party still seem able to make a fight of it. With W. T. Cosgrave's former seat in Cork Borough being lost, and former Justice Minister James Fitzgerald-Kenney losing his seat in Mayo, following the defeat of John Marcus O'Sullivan in Kerry the previous year, very few of the old guard were left, and they were simply not being replaced. Only two new Fine Gael TDs had been elected in 1943 (both were sons of incumbent deputies) and only one new Fine Gael TD was elected in 1944. Internal transfers between Fine Gael candidates fell to a mere 62 per cent, as the party label became less significant.

Fianna Fáil recaptured most of the ground it had lost in 1943, winning 76 seats against the 62 of the combined opposition. There were straws in the wind suggesting that more difficult times might lie ahead: for the first time, the Labour TDs actually voted against de Valera's renomination as Taoiseach, and more Labour transfers went to Fine Gael than to Fianna Fáil. But for the moment, Fianna Fáil had a very comfortable Dáil majority, and de Valera was able to form his sixth consecutive government.

Notes on 1944 election results

The total number of votes cast was 1,230,139, of which 12,790 (1.04%) were rejected as invalid. The turnout figures given in the table on p. 298 represent valid votes as a percentage of the electorate. Figures for electorates in Connacht–Ulster and Ireland given on p. 297 exclude Donegal West (uncontested constituency); the total electorate including Donegal West would be 1,816,142. The figures for electorates and valid votes in each constituency are confirmed by the Report 1944–45 of the Department of Local Government and Public Health (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1946), pp. 137–8.

Ailtirí na hAiséirghe candidates are included under “Others” in the above tables. The details are shown below:

IRISH ELECTIONS 1922-44: RESULTS AND ANALYSIS

This volume assembles the full results of all elections to Dáil Éireann from 1922 to 1944. These results have hitherto been unpublished and have been available only from local and provincial newspapers. The book also contains analysis of each election, summaries of votes, percentages and seats for each election, lists of TDs elected at each election, information on defeated TDs and women TDs, analysis of transfer patterns, members of government appointed after each election, and the full results of all by-elections held in the period.

Elections to Dáil Éireann are held under the STV (single transferable vote) electoral system, and this volume provides a fascinating account of STV in operation as well as constituting an indispensable record of Irish political history in the first 25 years of the independent state.

Dr Michael Gallagher is a Lecturer in Political Science at Trinity College, University of Dublin.
