Career Opportunities

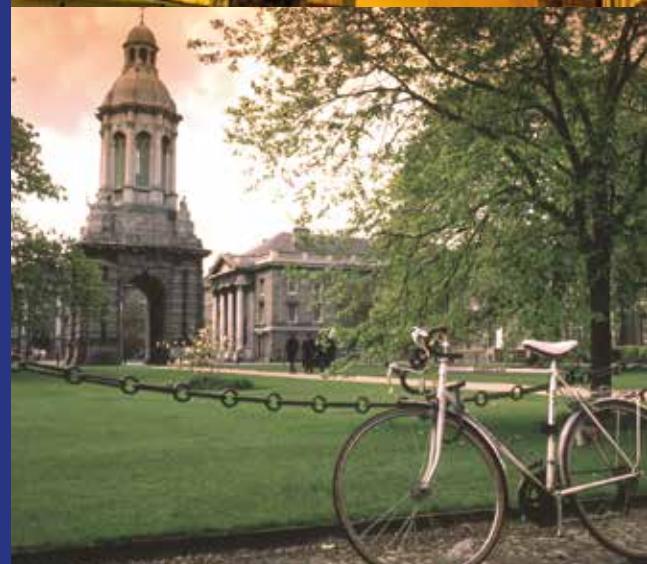

A degree in theology equips students to think clearly and logically, to see the big picture and address a problem from many angles. These are skills that 21st century employers are seeking.

CTS is a brand new degree course in Ireland and has no graduates as yet. Current students aspire to a wide range of occupations including journalism, law, teaching, academics and working in human rights. Surveys in other countries show that graduates of theology have developed flourishing careers in these areas, in business and in a wide range of other occupations. Many students have also used an undergraduate degree in theology as a springboard to a Master's, MBA or Ph.D.

Study Abroad

During the third year of the degree programme, we encourage students to gain experience of studying and living abroad for a semester or a year. At present Trinity College has exchange agreements with over 130 institutions as part of the Erasmus programme. The Loyola Institute also has an association with the University of Notre Dame in the USA and further US associations are being developed.

I'm loving studying Theology. I'm fascinated about the history of thought... We learn about why people did things not just what they did.

Imaani Keogh,
Wexford, 2nd year student CTS

I'm learning the skills to enable me to think critically and present my opinions both verbally and in writing.

Eoghan Stanley,
Slane, Co. Meath, 3rd year student CTS

The Loyola Institute was incredibly welcoming when I studied there for my year abroad. The small class sizes along with the high level of instruction and commitment on the part of the lecturers are two points that really set the department apart.
