Executive Summary

Since becoming Vice President for Global Engagement for the University in 2021, the global geopolitical landscape has been marked by great instability around the world. We have emerged from a pandemic and a war has broken out in Europe. Our students and staff and our wider community of partners have been affected by the challenges of conflict, terrorism and climate events.

The horrific terrorist attack on Israel on 7 October, the ongoing hostage situation and the unbearable human tragedy perpetuated in Gaza have impacted our community in many ways.

Trinity College Dublin, the University of Dublin continues to be a diverse community where academic freedom is valued and protected. We seek to increase that diversity through our recruitment activities and our partnership development. Our participation in Erasmus+ and wider international student mobility initiatives ensures that our students go out into the world to live, learn and have fun and also to see and hear different perspectives, voices and lived experiences.

Trinity Global, and the University as a whole, is committed to supporting a diverse community that promotes inclusion, equality, and equity. We strive to make sure that our students and our staff feel connected and engaged and that they belong. We launched our Pathway to Belonging initiative in the past year as a tangible commitment to supporting belonging. In addition, Trinity Global became the first professional unit at Trinity and in Ireland to be awarded an Athena Swan Bronze Award in recognition to our commitment to equality, diversity and inclusion. The award was the culmination of a detailed self-assessment process which we approached with curiosity, compassion, and a commitment to responding to areas which were identified as needing change.

We are nearing the end of the current Global Engagement strategy and looking forward to collaboratively developing a new plan as part of the institutional strategic planning process.

According to an old Irish proverb, ‘Ní neart go cur le chéile’ /‘There is no strength without unity’. The work of Trinity Global intersects with all of our Schools and many other professional units and what follows in this report is the culmination and a celebration of that collective endeavour.

Dr. Emma K. Stokes
Vice President for Global Engagement
We are a globally connected community of learning, research and scholarship, inspiring generations to meet the challenges of the future.
