

Hi,

I would like to suggest naming our library after Frederick Douglas. As an abolitionist, Douglas opposed everything George Berkeley did and stood for his people's human rights in a time when few of his race were able to.

Additionally, as a close friend of Daniel O'Connell, a connection to Ireland is maintained. I think while it may be tempting to pick a Trinity graduate to honour, it is important to recognise the university's own ties with colonism and pick someone who future graduates may look to as something worth striving for.

Kind regards,
Nicola Foynes
