

Ad Theologiam PROMOVENDAM

The tasks of theology in Europe today

20th to 23rd of August 2025 - Dublin

In August 2025, the Loyola Institute, Trinity College, Dublin will host the congress of the European Society for Catholic Theology. The congress will address the relevance of theology for contemporary Europe, with its many challenges.

Theology must allow itself to be addressed by questions of culture and the contemporary world, while at the same time seeking to bring its insights to contemporary discussion in politics, society, and church. Serious questions arise: climate change, the movement of peoples, the dignity of human life in an era of technological advances, the reemergence of war in Europe, the persistence of sexual abuse and its mishandling, the crisis of theological institutions. The congress reflects on the formative influence of Christianity on European culture, considering whether, and how, it might be influential today. Throughout, the Congress seeks to better understand the vocation of the Church to articulate the mystery that is God to the contemporary world.

The European Society for Catholic Theology

The aim of the European Society for Catholic Theology is to promote the academic discipline of Catholic theology primarily at the intersection where Church and society meet. As a systematic reflection on 'faith seeking understanding', Catholic theology engages in interdisciplinary research and education which is loyal and yet constructively critical vis-à-vis the Church, while at the same time meeting the highest academic standards. The organization aims to encourage the communication, promotion and support of theological education, research, and services. ESCT publishes a bi-annual journal, ET-Studies, in which the diverse problems that challenge contemporary theological debate in Europe are explored and discussed. Authors are cordially invited to contribute. Every two years the society organizes an international congress.
