Module Content
Module Description	This module will look at fundamental questions about the nature of the mind through the lens of the question of our knowledge of it. Topics covered will broadly be divided into, in the first half of term, those concerning our knowledge of other minds, and, in the second half, those concerning our knowledge of our own minds.
Module Learning Aims	Students will learn to engage with a range of issues in the philosophy of mind and to appreciate interconnections between them.
Learning Outcomes	How do we know what other people are thinking and feeling? Do other minds exist, or am I alone in the universe? Is there a special kind of access we have to our own minds which we necessarily lack to other people's? What is it to represent a creature as having a 'mind'? How can our understanding of ourselves and other people go wrong? These are the kinds of questions we will address in this module.
Indicative Reading / Resources	A full syllabus and reading list will be made available at the beginning of term.

Assessment
