

Early Experiences and Development

Elizabeth Nixon

Lecture & Lecturer Overview

Elizabeth Nixon is Associate Professor in Developmental Psychology. Her research focuses on family and parenting as a context for children's development. She is co-director of the Infant and Child Research Lab where she conducts observational research on parent-infant interaction and child development. In her lecture entitled Early Experiences and Later Development she will address the question of the extent which our early experiences shape our later development and whether children can recover from early adversity.
